

BIOGRAPHY

Dora Alepasse Nyaaba is strongly motivated by the passion to contribute to public policy by consulting for governments and the private sector which includes individuals especially in Africa on issues of direct relevance to Finance and Development.

She is currently a student at the Ghana Institute of Management and Public Administration (GIMPA) studying Development Finance. She is convinced that her choice for this subject will maximize her exposure to a wide range of developmental issues necessary to make meaningful contributions to developing, implementing and shaping policies.

Dora also works in the health sector as a Biostatistics assistant where she provides effective collection and analysis of patients' data to aid in further clinical research.

With the knowledge that data is the new oil for the 21st century, Dora is presently exploring Data Analytics with the hope of using financial data to develop predictive models to help people and businesses make sound decisions so that economies in Africa will thrive.

Dora is a junior youth teacher of the PCG and enjoys to develop and maintain good relationships. She enjoys conversations on anything fitness, and divides her leisure time watching YouTube vlogs and movies.
